SYNOPSIS

Mr Bowman, Camilla decides to attempt the work. With ideas running riot in her head she goes home at midnight the night sketching. In the morning, armed with her samples, she sets out for the agency. The critics were enthusiastic about her work. And Mr. Weeks offers her a salary of $50.00 a week to start and a prospect of having it doubled. She goes to keep a dinner engagement with Edgar. She thought, too, as her eyes roved the inventory of the neat, snug room the dishes ranged in the cupboard and the tiny porcelain sink in the kitchen, that it would be nice to have Peter over to dinner with her occasionally. And perhaps the

"But I want you to see it, Rose—it's a duck of a place. And I want to see you, because I have some good news for you, then I'll drive you home. I would have dinner with you somewhere, but I promised to be home tonight."

"To dine in state one last time? Well, you'd better make the most of just like everything else in life—better to anticipate than to experience. It will be just as monotonous to pick up your own pen and carry it to the sink to wash it, as it is to watch Bates carry it to the remote regions of the kitchen as if it were a burnt offering for the inner shrine." It, my dear, because housekeeping is

Rose's pleasant philosophy and easy chatter rambled on when she inspected the apartment. "Hot-cha!" was her surprised comment. "Ain't we grand, though? But can we afford it, that's the important question before the house of representatives. Have you balanced your budget both ways?"

Camilla's revelation that she would be able to contribute definitely to the arrangement, called for another "Hot-cha!" from Rose. "You're a whizz, old girl, and no kiddin'! You sure will get wherever you want to go. I wish I were more like you,"

"You can do anything I can, honey," the elder sister assured her, "and just as soon as I get that raise, you are going to begin that secretarial course."

Roos's dark eyes shone dreamily. "Ge'd, you know, a swell sister, all right. You know, I used to hate you when you were a kid, but now I love you. You wear swell clothes and your car and your grand manners, and I knew we looked like beggars to you, even when we thought we had things pretty nice ourselves. But even then, I couldn't hate you very much. I know why, now. It's because you really aren't a bit snooty—it was all my imagination and jealousy."

"I'm glad you didn't hate me, Rose." Camilla slipped an arm around Rose's shoulders, hungry for the family life that a strange fate had snatched from her. I've always needed a sister like you, and I want to do something in return for all you are going to teach me."

"About what?"

"Well, you are going to teach me to cook, so I can take care of my Peter some day, for one thing. But more than that, I want to learn your viewpoint about—life! You are a year younger than I, Rose, and you think you have missed a lot of things I've had. But somehow, you are the one who has lived and grown wise while I have skimmed the surface of superficial trifles. I want to learn how to live deeply and wisely.

Rose was silent for a moment. That she had anything to offer this beautiful, talented girl whom fortune had smiled upon, was a surprise to her, but she said presently, with gay insouciance, "Well, if it's how to make three and three add seven, and how to turn the skirt of last season's dress into a blouse for your new suit, you want to learn, I can do all that. And I've seen Ma change a roast into stew, then hash and then tumbles so often that I can do the trick like a magician, myself. Those may sound trivial, my dear, but they are really deep mysteries of my life."

"Any accomplishment that requires thought and skill is a mystery until it is done," Camilla agreed. "And those which seem the least important are the ones that make the world go 'round, I've discovered."

YOUR HIDDEN TROUBLE

Incomplete elimination of body wastes gives rise to a far greater extent than is generally realized. Even people with the most regular habits often suffer from the condition. Lack of elimination is why you often feel weak and weary, or suffer headaches and indigestion. The sure way to correct this condition is to follow the Andrews Rules of Health. Eat moderately, sleep deeply, and keep your bowels moving to satisfy your body—and, once or twice each day, brush your teeth with the famous Andrews Liver Salt. Andrews' Liver Salt will keep you in the pink of condition by helping you eliminate the waste products of your living order. Your druggist sells Andrews in a box.

Mine be the reverent listening love
That waits all day on Thee,
With service of a watchful heart
Which no one else can see.
—A. L. Waring.

Nothing is small or great in God's sight; whatever He becomes great to us, however seemingly trifling, and if once the voice of His conscience tells us that He requires anything of us we have no right to measure its importance. On the other hand, whatever He would have of us, however important it may be to Him, it is as nothing to us. How do you know what you may lose by neglecting the duty which you think is so trifling, or the blessing which its faithful performance may bring? Be sure if you do your very best in that which you laid out on doing, you will not be left without sufficient help when your weightier occasion arises. When you lay out on Him, trust Him, His eye upon you, listen to His voice, and then go on bravely and cheerfully.
